When Og the Giant was born, it soon would be obvious that he did everything in a BIG way. It wasn't long before everyone in the village realized that he just wasn't your average baby. When he cried everyone knew it and even a villager miles away covered their ears to block out the noise. • Waaaaah! Waaaaah! It was so bad that even the mountains rained boulders into their valleys. And eat! Og had the biggest appetite in the land and gurgle, gurgle, gurgled, down buckets of milk. Og the Giant was a baby like no one had ever seen before or since that day he arrived. Unfortunately Og was so big there was no bed that would ever fit him. Crunch! Chairs and beds simply collapsed beneath his weight and it wasn't long until his shoulders touched the top of the tallest cedar tree. • Og had to sleep on the ground, but there was no comfort for him. As the days passed, he grew grumpier, but he really had the heart of a gentle giant. • Animals gathered around him during those long nights seeking shelter in everything from his busy beard to the arches of his BIG feet. All the animals chattered away until they nodded off to sleep ...

except Og. • Noah noticed that Og had a love for the animals and came to him saying, "A Great Flood is coming soon." • It was no concern of Og's because he was too BIG to drown in a flood, but Noah needed him to gather the animals. "God's other creatures are not so lucky," • Noah had explained and Og, the gentle giant, agreed to help. The storm was approaching and it looked like a bad one with heavy rain and winds. It looked like Og would need some help, but he didn't fit in Noah's ark. Could he weather the storm on the top of the ark or would he drown during the deluge?
