Some species, however, only have temporary skin folds which appear when they give birth and disappear once the baby is fully developed.* Kangaroos are excellent swimmers. When chased by a pack of dingoes, they often go into the water. If pursued, they can use their front legs to hold the dingoes underwater and drown them.* The Tammar wallaby can drink seawater, which allows it to survive when water is scarce.* Koalas can eat 2.5 pounds (1.1 kilograms) of eucalyptus leaves a day but get little energy from them.
